

Courtney Crother - Project One - Roman Sculpture Garden

The intended audience for this project is people who are interested in art history, more specifically Greek art history. It is for people who are interested in the different Greek periods of art. It can also be for people who enjoy the arts and seeing sculptures. It could be housed in a museum on location or on a museum website. It could also be on a historical website that has information on Greek history.

This project is the experience of walking through an educational sculpture garden. It gives a brief overview of the three main Greek styles. The user can go through the different rooms of styles and explore different styles of sculpture. The garden has an entrance and exit to make it feel like the user is going through different rooms and they can start over if they find the end. I also added a small amount of artistic description of the sculpture to try and make the user think critically about the sculptures.

I was influenced by the statue section of the de Young museum. You can meander through the rooms and observe the art. I like the aesthetic of the white marble on the black background of the computer screen. It allows for full focus on the art itself. I also took influence from art history textbooks which usually show the sculptures on a black background.
